Gisele Bündchen's pregnancy has been confirmed by the strangest of sources - the coat company London Fog. Bündchen and hubby Tom Brady have been unwilling to admit they're with child. But London Fog - which hired Bündchen to model its fall line - released a statement yesterday saying that photos for its ad campaign that show Gisele with a perfectly flat tummy were "retouched to respect her privacy during this wonderful and personal time in her life." Dari Marder, London Fog's chief marketing officer, goes even further, saying in the release, "Nobody is sexier or more beautiful than Gisele Bündchen in nothing but a London Fog trench coat, even with her visible baby bump." Translation: there is a bump, but you're not allowed to see it.

Actor turns up ace in the Hole

Actor Joe Pantoliano tells us he's proud to be honored by the Woods Hole Film Festival tonight - now that he knows what Woods Hole is. "When first told me Woods Hole, I thought they were calling me an [expletive]." Pantoliano will be honored with the Saint Aire Award for promoting the understanding of mental illness in his documentary "No Kidding, Me Too!," which will screen at 7 p.m. Pantoliano tells us he's had overwhelming support for the project. Members of his foundation's advisory board include Marcia Gay Harden, Robin Williams, and Harrison Ford. "People say, 'My God, Joey, I didn't want to see a movie about mental disease, but it was so funny.' It's not meant to be a downer." Pantoliano told us he'd be staying at the Mandarin Oriental one more night before heading to Woods Hole today. Apparently, he's fallen in love with the hotel bedding. "The Mandarin has got the best beds," Pantoliano said, adding wistfully, "The [expletive] sheets." Pantoliano will accept his award from his pal Christy Scott Cashman.
