To borrow a line from "Fight Club": Liz Taylor (left) should learn that the first rule of AA is that you don't talk about AA. Author Tom Sykes (whom we like, even though he worked for the wrong newspaper) just released a memoir about alcoholism, "What Did I Do Last Night?: A Drunkard's Tale." He told me at a Nello's dinner for Trevor White's newly published "Kitchen Con" that he wasn't able to mention in his own book that he was in Alcoholics Anonymous, because the group frowns on any publicity. "They've been like that ever since Liz Taylor talked about it," he explained. ... Sandra Bernhard isn't weighing in on the latest Madonna adoption controversy. "I don't have any comment on that — it's too personal," she told us at Conde Nast Traveler Readers' Choice Awards. ... "Kettle of Fish" co-star Christy Scott Cashman had several rounds of Bellinis with pals before heading to a public screening of the film at the Loews Village 7 last week. Audience members tried to "shush" the rowdy crew as they loudly cheered their friend — and eventually summoned the manager to throw them out. Fortunately, all parties had a sense of humor about the incident when she identified herself as one of the actresses.
